The argument, first, conceptualizes the current political-economic formation as one of communicative capitalism. It then moves to emphasize specific features of communicative capitalism in light of the fantasies animating them. The fantasy of abundance leads to a shift in the basic unit of communication from the message to the contribution.

Communicative capitalism forces the political energy to produce added value. In its logic the most important act is to consume the endless content stream of communication platforms and take part in producing content. While communicative capitalism has increased the amount of communication, the democratic significance of communication has decreased.

Jodi Dean's scholarly article, "Communicative Capitalism: Circulation and The Foreclosure of Politics" does shed some light on the role social media has played in recent years in circulating political information for people to read. As Dean points out, social media has helped over the years in connecting people with national and global information.

I'm not sure how many of us have encountered this article (or her later book), but here's the abstract for Jodi Dean's "Communicative Capitalism: Circulation and the Foreclosure of Politics." Dean rethinks just how much "sway" networked communities (that perform the majority of their work online) really have in generating concrete political change.

This essay considers the political form that is presupposed in questions of resistance and revolution. It situates resistance and revolution in communicative capitalism, a setting characterised by intense winner-take-all inequality, the decline of symbolic efficiency, and the shift from the use to the circulation value of communicative utterances.
